More than 90% Farmers are Aware of Negative Effects of Chemicals and Pesticides

About 91.3 percent of farmers are aware of negative effects of chemicals and pesticides. However, 90.7 percent of them use chemical-based fertilisers and pesticides as it gives high yield. These are some of the findings of a study conducted by CUTS International in six major agriculture potential districts of Rajasthan: Jaipur, Dausa, Chittorgarh, Pratapgarh, Udaipur and Kota covering 1536 consumers and 1529 farmers.

Findings of the study were released in 'Annual State Level Stakeholder Consultation and Feedback Meeting' organised as part of the 'Pilot Project to Promote Organic Consumption in the State of Rajasthan'. The project is being implemented by CUTS with the support of Swedish Society for Nature Conservation (SSNC).

George Cherian, Director, CUTS in his opening remarks stated that promoting organic farming is a key component under National Mission on Sustainable Agriculture. 'National Project on Organic Farming' commenced in 2004 but even after 10 years there is only 0.3 percent of cultivated land under organic farming, i.e. 5.2 million hectare. Organic farming in India has to go a long way.

As special guest of the programme Shital Prasad Sharma, Director, Agriculture Department, Government of Rajasthan appreciated CUTS and SSNC for the integrated efforts to put together the production and consumption sides.

Amarjeet Singh, Project Coordinator, CUTS through a presentation shared that only 25.2 percent consumers have purchased organic products at any point of time although 78 percent are aware of ill-effects of pesticides. The awareness is low among women which was found at 28 percent. The encouraging fact is that 98 percent consumers expressed willingness to purchase if organic products are available. He further shared that 2.8 percent farmers use only organic input, 39.2 percent use only chemical while 57.9 percent use a mix of both organic and chemical. Certification awareness is found to be an issue as only 13.6 percent farmers are found aware of organic certification.

Sharing the experiences from Sweden, Sara Nilsson said that 2.5 percent population of Sweden is member of SSNC – a 105-year old organisation having partners worldwide. She stated that organic consumption has considerably increased in Sweden in the last two years and they want it to be increased worldwide. Promoting organic consumption is one of the key areas of work for SSNC. She also opined that 40 organisations and 25 countries participated in the Green Action Week organised worldwide during October 2014. During the event, Ulrika Hjertstrand, in-charge of Green Action Week in SSNC at the international-level was also present.
